Hobab, the Desert Tracker, a Brother-in-Law of Moses, Enters the Picture of Israelite Wanderings-Some Significances for Present

BY WILLIAM T. ELLIS

There are striking analogies between the present plight of our bewildered nations and that of the Israelites, plunged into the new experience of life in the wilderness, with the old stabilities and the constant of the derness, with the old stabilities all gone from under their feet all the expedients of journeying and making camp in a desert and the versities were real and confidence-shaking. Again and again they cried for the good old days of well-fed servitude in Egypt.

True; they had assurance that good times were coming; better times than ever they had known. But that prospect seemed dim and distant, in the light of present trials. There might be a land of bread and honey ahead of them; but somehow, that did not take the sting from the sandstorms, wilderness experience.

though now mostly under Egyptian jurisdiction.

At the present moment, there is war raging on the eastern side between the Hejaz Arabs and the British troops, Great Britain having arbitrarily annexed the strip of Hajez territory running down from Ma'an to Akaba. The latter post—Solomon's Elath, or Ezion Gabar—has been occupied by British troops, and a British warship is riding in the wonderful deep harbor of Akaba.

War and strife have been chronic in Sinai, since before the days of Moses. 'All travellers write of the risks they ran and the troubles they underwent. Some of these explorers perished in their efforts to penetrate the mysteries of the desert. Even the forces of the Egyptian rovernment, which have brought unwonted peace to the region, have travelled in Ford cars with machine guns mounted for action. Some of Sinai is sand, but most of it is flinity soil, which glares like a mirror in the torrid heat. The wind-carved, chalk-streaked mountains of the northern end of the peninsula give way at the south to grim red granite mountains, which display so many weird formations that superstitious folk could easily imagine it as demon-possessed. Cairns of propitiation abound. Mirrages as general. Sandstorms are frequent, and as I can testify, the flinty particles cut the skin till the nations depends upon Jehovah—particles cut the skin till the nations does things by mechanical contrict wance.

While Jarvis Bey, the Governor, has made possible automobile travel over the whole of Sinai, it is rough and adventuresome going. Real imagination—or call it faith—is needed to enable one to envisage a distant Promised Land when in the midst of a "great and terrible wilderness."

A Traveller's Glimpse of Sinai. Sinai has always stood as a symbol of a terrible and mysterious land. It is a peninsula thrusting down from Palestine between the Mediterranean and the Red Sea. It is a part of Arabia, though now mostly under Egyptian jurisdiction.

An amendment to include water control districts in the bill was adopted.

Representative W. E. Pope of Corpus Christi offered an amendment to require cities and towns to remit the penalties and interest on delinquent taxes. The amendment was opposed as being violative of the Home rule provisions of the constitution.

Opponents of the amendment argued the cities already had the power to remit the interest and penalties if they wanted to while Pope and other advocates of the amendment held it would be mandatory if the legislature included it in the bill since cities were required to follow the general statutes. Pope said in some cites officials had refused to remit the people in the cities," Pope said.
